This is his duty. He fails in the most important obligation of his citizenship if he willfully omits to cast his ballot. It is only the hermit who lives so apart from men as to have no share in the active government of a municipal aggregate.

All other men are part and parcel of a corporation whose functions concern them despite themselves. It is easy enough to say, as many do, that politics are rotten and that politicians and office-holders are interested and mercenary seekers after spoils, whose flagrant misdeeds are shared by the voters who elect them. If this is so, it is a part of the citizens to correct all this, and the ballot is the lever with which to pry this incubus out. The ballot is the instrument of reform and is the indorse ment of rectitude.

To vote to-morrow is a duty which the citizen owes to himself, to his family, to as fellow-citizens. To neglect it is culnable indolence or ignorance. Go to the sile and do your duty like a man and like n American citizen.

the eye was once made. In making an artificial eye for a person who was very particular, the first thing to do was togst the right color and the peculiar grouping of tints in the natural Iris. It was not done by painting, but the colors had to be blown into the crystal by heat. The process was an extremely deli-cate one, and the slightest mistake would spoll the shell. Sometimes, Mr. Briera said, he had to try a dozen times before he got the right effect. Then the peculiar tint of the creekall, with the little blood vessels, corresponding to the natural eve of the patient, had to be obtained, and here, too, was a difficulty.

Sometimes the eyeball had a bluish tint and sometimes it was residish. All these little points had to be observed in making
